“How can we address and prevent veteran homelessness in our communities?”

Lilia Palomares

10/31/18

Word count: 247
How can we address and prevent veteran homelessness in our communities?

There are many ways that communities and organizations can work together to put an end to veteran homelessness. The main thing that these people need is shelter or affordable housing. However, there are other things that communities can do to help these homeless veterans. Three ways to get involved in addressing and preventing veteran homelessness in our community are, organizing fundraisers, community donations, and job fairs.

First, I think that organizing fundraisers will help veterans financially. Schools, churches, community businesses can sell things to raise money that can help veterans pay their first month’s rent and security deposits. Some examples of fundraisers may include selling food, baked goods, doing car washes, and yard sales.

Next, people in our communities and businesses can donate household essentials that can make their new house feel like a home. Some of the things that homeless may need in their homes includes: clothes, blankets, shoes, mattresses, furniture, food, money, and other supplies.

Finally, I think that the most important thing homeless veterans need is a job. Community Employers can host job fairs that can open job opportunities, so veterans can develop new skills. More job opportunities will help homeless veterans be self-sufficient.

In conclusion, organizing fundraisers, community donations, and job fairs are the ways I think would help prevent and address veteran homelessness. If we work together as a community, we can help the people who have helped protect our country.